Mid Cap Futures and Options – Focus on the Center

Mid Cap Stocks: Strong Outperformance Versus Blue Chips

German mid cap stocks – as measured by the German mid cap index MDAX® – have outpaced their counterparts from the German blue chip index DAX® every year, for the last six years now. In 2006 as well, they lead again on the upside after the first six months of the year. The Swiss market paints a similar picture. Given the strong outperformance of mid caps, and improved liquidity as a by-product, Eurex has been encouraged to gradually expand its range of products in this segment.

Performance: Mid Cap Versus Blue Chip Indexes

Positive Development of Trading in Mid Cap Futures

Derivatives on the TecDAX®, both futures and options, have already been traded since 2003. March 2005 saw the introduction of MDAX® Futures contracts, with the SMIM® Futures contract following in September of the same year. Since then, both products have developed very positively.

Turnover, along with the great number of market participants actively trading in these index products, has clearly suggested that there is demand for a parallel offer of options on both indexes.

Development of Mid Cap Futures

Continuous Expansion of the Derivatives Product Range

You can now also trade options on the MDAX® and SMIM® indexes, alongside the relevant futures. Both contracts have been designed along very similar lines as their futures counterparts. In addition to German and Swiss mid cap index futures and options contracts, our product portfolio also comprises single stock futures and options on the most important German and Swiss mid caps.

Eurex also offers futures and options on the European mid cap index, the Dow Jones STOXX® Mid 200, as well as on various selected European single stocks. We keep enhancing our product range in this segment on a continuous basis.

We currently offer the following range of mid cap derivatives, which are equally suitable for hedging, speculation, or arbitrage:
