

Student assistants and interns

The business model of Deutsche Börse Group comprises the entire securities and derivatives trading chain including all processes prior to and following the “actual trading process”. Our employees are highly committed to the implementation of this business model – making them the heart and backbone of the company. They shape our corporate culture through their sense of responsibility, operational readiness, flexibility and the will to deliver an outstanding performance. The same can be said about our new colleagues, student assistants and interns.

Deutsche Börse Group sees it as its duty to contribute to the training of its next generation of employees, therefore offering employment and internship opportunities to students for the benefit of both parties. Students are actively involved in the processes of their department and entrusted with a wide range of challenging tasks. They are closely supervised by our employees, offered valuable advice and recognised in their department. By recognising and promoting their potential early on, the company retains young, talented employees: after graduation, a number of these students start their professional career at Deutsche Börse Group.

Students can either work part time as student assistants alongside their studies or temporarily exchange the lecture hall for our offices to complete an internship – the perfect opportunity to experience the stock exchange first-hand and gain valuable practical experience in an innovative company. As a high-tech financial services company, Deutsche Börse is not limited to accepting economics students, but also employs law, IT, mathematics, physics and humanities scholars. We offer a broad spectrum of job opportunities as well as an excellent framework to develop individual talents and creativity.

For an overview of Deutsche Börse’s various fields of activity, students can take a look behind the scenes of the events at the stock exchange beyond their own department with our programme “It’s boarding time” – for example by catching a glimpse at the work of our colleagues at Market Supervision or by networking with representatives from different business divisions through series of lecture. The regular student lunch and monthly get-together offer all of our students the opportunity to get to know each other and lay the foundation for their professional future – ideally, at Deutsche Börse.

Objectives

- Actively incorporate students into the business processes to add a valuable practical component to their training
- Discover and foster future potential in students and their long-term commitment to the company
- Present Deutsche Börse as an attractive future employer
- Enable and promote networking through the programme “It’s boarding time” and convey an overview of the company
